General information

Election regulations: For the conduct of the Hochschule Geisenheim University Senate elections in winter semester 2023/2024 the HGU election regulations of January 23, 2013, last amended on December 15, 2020 (Official Notice 07/2020), based on the HessHG, apply.

Election principles:

The representatives of the member groups in the Senate shall be elected in free, equal, secret and direct elections by the respective member group according to the principles of proportional representation (list election). The form of election shall be determined by whether one or more nominations are submitted per group of members.

Proportional representation: If there are several approved nominations for election in a group (i.e. more than one list), the election is conducted according to the rules of proportional representation. Each person entitled to vote has one vote. He or she can assign this vote to one list of nominations.

Direct election: If only one nomination for election or one list of candidates has been accepted in a group, it will be elected according to the rules of direct election. Each eligible voter has as many votes as there are seats in the Senate to be filled by the respective group.

If, in addition to a nomination for election that has already been submitted to the election office, at least one further list proposal is submitted within the same group of members, the election shall be conducted according to the principles of proportional representation. In this case, the order of the candidates indicated is decisive.

Substitutes: In the elections to the Senate substitutes for the Senate members are also determined, who in turn form the Extended Senate together with the Senate members.

Proportional representation: Substitutes shall be the list members listed in the order of the list of candidates after the members of the Senate according to the number of mandates allocated to the list.

Direct election: If only one nomination is submitted for a group, the candidates who have not been allocated a seat on the basis of the election results and who have the next highest number of votes are substitutes.

If a list of candidates contains fewer candidates than the maximum number of seats it would be entitled to, the remaining seats shall remain vacant.

Term of office: The term of office begins on the first day of the semester following the election, on April 1, 2024.

The term of office of the representatives from the group of students is one year. The representatives from the other groups are each in office for two years.
